

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11 12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

KENT HASSELL, Plaintiff,
v.
UBER TECHNOLOGIES, INC.,
Defendant.

Case No. 20-cv-04062-PJH

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT AND DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE CERTAIN CLASS ALLEGATIONS

Re: Dkt. No. 37

United States District Court
Northern District of California

Defendant Uber Technologies, Inc.’s d/b/a Uber Eats (“defendant”) motion to dismiss plaintiff Kent Hassell’s (“plaintiff”) first amended complaint (“FAC”) and strike certain class allegations came on for hearing before this court on May 6, 2021. Plaintiff appeared through his counsel, Shannon Liss-Riordan. Defendant appeared through its counsel, Andrew Spurchise. Having read the parties’ papers and carefully considered their arguments and the relevant legal authority, and good cause appearing, the court hereby GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART defendant’s motion to dismiss and DENIES defendant’s motion to strike.

BACKGROUND

This case is a putative wage and hour class action premised on the alleged violation of various California labor laws. Defendant provides food delivery services through its “Uber Eats” mobile phone application (the “Uber Eats App”). Dkt. 33 (FAC) ¶ 2, 10-11. Plaintiff has worked as an Uber Eats driver since January 2020. Id. ¶ 6. Plaintiff seeks to certify a class comprising “all Uber Eats drivers who have worked in California.” Id. ¶ 49.

The instant order represents the court’s second substantive consideration of plaintiff’s pleadings. On December 7, 2020, the court dismissed all claims alleged in

1 plaintiff's original complaint. Dkt. 30 (the "December 7, 2020 order") at 20. To the extent
2 plaintiff premised his claim for declaratory relief on past violations, the court dismissed
3 that claim with prejudice. Id. at 18. The court permitted plaintiff to amend all other
4 claims. Id. The court directed plaintiff to correct all factual deficiencies in the remaining
5 claims and follow certain instructions when amending his minimum wage and overtime
6 claims. Id. The court will detail its December 7, 2020 order as necessary in the analysis 7 below.

8 On January 4, 2021, plaintiff filed his FAC. Dkt. 33. In it, plaintiff maintains 9 substantively identical background and class allegations to those proffered in his original
10 complaint. Dkt. 33-1 (redline comparing original complaint with FAC). Plaintiff continues
11 to allege that, since the California Supreme Court's decision in Dynamex Operations
12 West v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. 5th 903 (2018) (Dynamex) and the California state
13 legislature's passage of Assembly Bill 5 (A.B. 5) (previously codified at Labor Code § 14 2750.3 but recodified at Labor Code § 2775), defendant has misclassified plaintiff as an 15 "independent contractor" rather than an "employee." FAC ¶¶ 2-4, 13-25, 46-47. Based 16 on that misclassification allegation, plaintiff brings claims for the following:

- 17 1. Violation of Labor Code § 2802 and the Industrial Welfare Commissions ("IWC")
18 Wage Order 9-2001, Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8, § 11090 ("Wage Order 9"), premised 19 on defendant's failure to reimburse drivers "for expenses they paid," including 20 "gas, insurance, car maintenance, and phone and data charges." Id. ¶¶ 58-59.
- 21 2. Violation of Labor Code §§ 1197, 1194, 1182.12, 1194.2, 1197.1, 1199, and Wage 22 Order 9 premised on defendant's failure "to ensure its delivery drivers receive 23 minimum wage for all hours worked." Id. ¶¶ 60-61.
- 24 3. Violation of Labor Code §§ 1194, 1198, 510, 554, and 2750.3, and Wage Order 9 25 premised on defendant's failure "to pay its employees the appropriate overtime 26 premium for overtime hours worked as required by California law." Id. ¶¶ 62-63.
- 27 4. Violation of Labor Code § 226(a) and Wage Order 9 premised on defendant's 28 failure to provide accurate wage statements. Id. ¶¶ 64-65.

1 5. Violation of Business & Professions Code § 17200, et. seq. (§ 17200), premised
 2 on defendant's purported violations of Labor Code §§ 2802, 1194, 1198, 510, 554,
 3 1197, 1194, 1182.12, 1194.2, 1197.1, 226.8, 226(a), and 246. Id. ¶¶ 66-69.

4 In his FAC, plaintiff adds allegations to each of the above claims. Dkt. 33-1 ¶¶ 2
 5 n.1, 27-48 (redline showing changes to similar claims alleged in the complaint). The 6 court will detail those additional allegations in its analysis below.

7 On February 1, 2021, defendant filed the instant motion. Dkt. 37. In it, defendant
 8 asks the court to dismiss all claims alleged in the FAC. Id. Defendant also asks the court 9 to strike the FAC's class allegations to the extent plaintiff seeks class certification "of 10 those bound by arbitration agreements with class action waivers." Id. at 8.

11 The court addresses each request in turn below.

12 DISCUSSION

13 A. Legal Standard

14 A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests for the legal sufficiency of the claims
 15 alleged in the complaint. Ileto v. Glock, 349 F.3d 1191, 1199-1200 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 16 8 requires that a complaint include a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that 17 the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Under Rule 12(b)(6), dismissal 18 "is proper when the complaint either (1) lacks a cognizable legal theory or (2) fails to 19 allege sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory." Somers v. Apple, Inc., 729
 20 F.3d 953, 959 (9th Cir. 2013). While the court is to accept as true all the factual 21 allegations in the complaint, legally conclusory statements, not supported by actual 22 factual allegations, need not be accepted. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79
 23 (2009). The complaint must proffer sufficient facts to state a claim for relief that is 24 plausible on its face. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 558-59 (2007).

25 B. Motion to Dismiss Analysis

26 In its opening brief, defendant argues that plaintiff's claims fail for two major 27 independent reasons. First, defendant asserts that Proposition 22, a ballot initiative 28 approved by California voters in the November 2020 election, "abates" all claims alleged

1 in the FAC (the “abatement argument”). Dkt. 37 at 13-14. On December 16, 2020,
2 California codified Proposition 22 at Business & Professions Code §§ 7448-7467. The 3 section at the heart of defendant’s abatement argument is Business & Professions Code
4 § 7451. The court will specifically refer to that section, as opposed to the uncodified
5 proposition more generally.

6 Second, defendant asserts that, except the claim for failure to reimburse business
7 expenses, all claims alleged in the FAC lack sufficient factual allegations. Id. at 14-28.

8 At the outset, the court notes that the abatement argument appears to raise novel
9 questions in a rapidly developing area of California law. That novelty aside, the parties’
10 briefing on the issues implicated by that argument falls short. However, this action is not 11 the court’s first pass on the abatement argument.

12 In Nicolas v. Uber Technologies, Inc., another action against defendant that is also 13 on the undersigned’s docket, the court previously permitted the California Employment
14 Lawyers Association and the Partnership for Working Families (“Amici”) to file an amicus
15 brief addressing a similar abatement argument. Nicolas, 19-cv-8228-PJH, Dkt. 65
16 (permitting leave to file Amici brief lodged at docket 58-1).

17 At oral argument on the motion at hand, plaintiff sought to “incorporate by 18 reference” Amici’s brief as part of his position. On May 20, 2021, the parties filed a 19 stipulation requesting that the court permit them to formally file that brief on this action’s
20 docket. Dkt. 48. As part of that stipulation, the parties further requested that the court 21 permit defendant to file a response to Amici’s brief and plaintiff to file a reply to such 22 response. Id. The court granted the parties’ request. Dkt. 49. The court has considered
23 the above-referenced filings on the abatement issue.<sup>1</sup>

24 The court will now address each of defendant’s major arguments in turn below.

25
26
27
28

---

<sup>1</sup> When filing the Amici brief in this action, the parties failed to remove the electronic case filing (“ECF”) generated header from the Nicolas action. Given their failure, the Amici brief filed at docket 48 includes two overlapping ECF headers, neither of which is legible.
To avoid confusion, the court will cite the Amici brief filed in the Nicolas action at docket 58-1.

1           1. The Court Denies Defendant’s Motion to the Extent Defendant Asserts
 2           that Business & Professions Code § 7451 Abates Plaintiff’s Labor
 3           Code Claims

4           In their papers, the parties and Amici cite numerous statutes and doctrines as 5           purportedly authoritative on the abatement argument. Those rules include the abatement
 6           doctrine, the repeal doctrine, the retroactivity doctrine, the rationale underlying Dynamex,
 7           as well as the text of the Business & Professions Code § 7451 and Labor Code § 2775.

8           These authorities are voluminous and wide-ranging. The particular language in 9           the cited statutes is critical and the distinctions between the cited doctrines are nuanced.
 10          Given these complexities, the court will divide its discussion on the abatement argument
 11          into two sections. First, the court will summarize the parties’ (and Amici’s) positions and 12          concurrently detail the statutes and doctrines underlying their positions. Second,
 13          following that summary, the court will identify and address the shortcomings in both sides’
 14          positions. In light of such shortcomings, the court cannot now conclusively determine 15          whether (or not) Business & Professions Code § 7451 abates plaintiff’s claims. Thus, the 16          court denies defendant’s motion to the extent it is premised on abatement. The court 17          makes this finding without prejudice to defendant’s ability to again raise this argument on 18          a motion for summary judgment following an opportunity for merits-based discovery.<sup>2</sup>

19                   a. The Proffered Arguments and Relevant Legal Rules

20           On April 30, 2018, the California Supreme Court issued its Dynamex decision. In 21           that case, the court considered the following:

22                   Here we must decide what standard applies, under California 23                   law, in determining whether workers should be classified as 24                   employees or as independent contractors for purposes of 25                   California wage orders, which impose obligations relating to the 26                   minimum wages, maximum hours, and a limited number of very 27                   basic working conditions (such as minimally required meal and 28                   rest breaks) of California employees. Dynamex, 4 Cal. 5th 903, 913-14 (emphasis in the original) (footnote omitted).

---

<sup>2</sup> On June 9, 2021, the Ninth Circuit in Lawson v. GrubHub Holdings, Inc., No. 18-15386 heard oral argument on a materially similar abatement issue. If the Ninth Circuit addresses that issue, the parties should discuss it in any motion for summary judgment.

1           Ultimately, the court in Dynamex held that the so-called ABC test applied to 2 determine whether a worker qualifies as an “employee” or “independent contractor” for 3 purposes of California’s wage orders. 4 Cal. 5th at 964. In effect, that test creates a 4 rebuttable presumption that a worker is an “employee,” as opposed to an “independent
 5 contractor. Id. To rebut that presumption, a “hiring entity” (i.e., a purported employer)
 6 must establish all of the following three factors (hence, the “A,” “B,” “C”):

- 7           A. That the worker is free from the control and direction of the 8 hiring entity in connection with the performance of the work,
 9 both under the contract for the performance of the work and 10 in fact.
- 11           B. That the worker performs work that is outside the usual 12 course of the hiring entity's business.
- 13           C. That the worker is customarily engaged in an independently 14 established trade, occupation, or business, the worker
 15 should be considered an employee and the hiring business 16 an employer under the suffer or permit to work standard in 17 wage orders. Id.

18           In a footnote, the court in Dynamex observed that this test appears in various 19 jurisdictions in one form or another. Id. at 956 n.23. It further noted that the ABC
 20 conditions “set forth” by it “track[] the Massachusetts version of the ABC test.” Id.

21           To support its adoption of the ABC test, the court in Dynamex explained that:

22           In [its] view, this interpretation of the suffer or permit to work
 23 standard is faithful to its history and to the fundamental purpose 24 of the wage orders and will provide greater clarity and 25 consistency, and less opportunity for manipulation, than a test 26 or standard that invariably requires the consideration and 27 weighing of a significant number of disparate factors on a case-
 28 by-case basis. Id. at 964.

29           Apparently, the California Supreme Court was not alone in its “view” of how to 30 classify employees for purposes of the state’s wage orders. On September 18, 2019, 31 following the Dynamex decision, the California state legislature passed A.B. 5, which, as 32 suggested above, codified the ABC conditions articulated in Dynamex as part of the 33 Labor Code. That statute took effect on January 1, 2020. Cal. Lab. Code § 2750.3.

34           For reasons unknown to this court, the legislature subsequently repealed Labor
 35 Code § 2750.3 and then recodified its standard at § 2775. That recodification took effect

United States District Court
Northern District of California

1 on September 4, 2020. To date, the ABC test remains codified at Labor Code § 2775.

2 Fast-forward a few months. California voters passed Proposition 22. The relevant
3 portion of that proposition appears at Business & Professions Code § 7451. That section 4 states the following:

5 Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including, but not 6 limited to, the Labor Code . . . , an app-based driver is an 7 independent contractor and not an employee or agent with respect to the app-based driver's relationship with a network company if the following conditions are met:

8 a. The network company does not unilaterally prescribe
9 specific dates, times of day, or a minimum number of hours 10 during which the app-based driver must be logged into the network company's online-enabled application or platform.

11 b. The network company does not require the app-based 12 driver to accept any specific rideshare service or delivery service request as a condition of maintaining access to the network company's online-enabled application or platform.

13 c. The network company does not restrict the app-based 14 driver from performing rideshare services or delivery services through other network companies except during 15 engaged time.

16 d. The network company does not restrict the app-based 17 driver from working in any other lawful occupation or business. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 7451.

18 The above sequence of legal developments lies at the core of defendant's
19 abatement argument. In its opening brief, defendant asserts that Business & Professions
20 Code § 7451 "effectively repealed" the ABC test "as to delivery people." Dkt. 37 at 13.
21 According to defendant, plaintiff "makes no effort" to allege that defendant fails to satisfy 22 any of the four conditions set forth in Business & Professions Code § 7451. Id. Thus,
23 defendant says, "at a minimum," the court should dismiss plaintiff's claims "to the extent
24 they are based on the time period post-dating [Business & Professions Code § 7451's]
25 effective date of December 16, 2020." Id.

26 But then defendant seeks more. Defendant says that the court must dismiss 27 plaintiff's claims (regardless of when the underlying violation occurred) under California's 28 abatement doctrine. Id. at 13-14. To support that contention, defendant principally relies

United States District Court
Northern District of California

1 on the California Supreme Court’s decision in Governing Bd. v. Mann, 18 Cal. 3d 819
2 (1977) (“Mann”) and the Court of Appeals’ decision in Zipperer v. County of Santa Clara,
3 133 Cal. App. 4th 1013, as modified (Oct. 28, 2005) (“Zipperer”).

4 In Mann, the California Supreme Court has recognized that:

5 Although the courts normally construe statutes to operate
6 prospectively, the courts correlatively hold under the common
7 law that when a pending action rests solely on a statutory basis, 8 and when no rights have vested under the statute, ‘a repeal of the statute without a saving clause will terminate all pending actions based thereon. Mann, 18 Cal. 3d at 829.

9 The court in Mann observed that this rule’s “most familiar application is in the 10 criminal realm,” however, “[a]s a host of California cases demonstrate . . . [its] reach . . .
11 has never been confined solely to criminal or quasi-criminal matters.” Id. at 830.

12 More recently, the court in Zipperer construed the above-referenced rule to mean:

13 [I]n other words, where the Legislature has conferred a remedy
14 and withdraws it by amendment or repeal of the remedial
15 statute, the new statutory scheme may be applied to pending actions without triggering retrospectivity concerns . . . Zipperer, 133 Cal. App. 4th at 1023.

16 The court in Zipperer added that “legislative action can effect a partial repeal of an 17 existing statute . . . The justification for this rule is that all statutory remedies are pursued 18 with full realization that the legislature may abolish the right to recover at any time.” Id.
19 To determine whether a new statute terminates a preexisting claim, the court in Zipperer 20 articulated the following four factors:

- 21 1. The statutory nature of the subject claim.
- 22 2. The unvested nature of the claimed rights.
- 23 3. The timing of the elimination of those rights.
- 24 4. The nature of the mechanism by which the right of action was 25 eliminated. Id.

26 With respect to the second factor, the court in Zipperer stated:

27 Repeal of a remedial statute destroys a pending statutory 28 action unless ‘vested or contractual rights have arisen’ under the statute. . . . Until it is fully enforced, a statutory remedy is

United States District Court
Northern District of California

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11 12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

merely an ‘inchoate, incomplete, and unperfected right,’ which is subject to legislative abolition. Id. at 1024.

With respect to the third factor, the court in Zipperer stated:

Whenever the Legislature eliminates a statutory remedy ‘before a judgment becomes final, the legislative act destroys the right of action.’ . . . Repeal thus ‘wipes out the cause of action unless the same has been merged into a final judgment.’ . . . ‘If final relief has not been granted before the repeal goes into effect it cannot be granted afterwards, even if a judgment has been entered and the cause is pending on appeal.’ Id.

With respect to the fourth factor, the court in Zipperer explained:

Finally, we turn to the legislative mechanism by which the right of action is abolished. Typically, that mechanism is repeal or amendment of the remedial statute. . . . But we know of no rule of law that limits the Legislature to those methods. To the contrary, . . . even where ‘the words of the . . . statute are not expressly words of repeal without a saving clause . . . the effect is the same in so far as the application of the principles is concerned when the legislature by apt expression has withdrawn the right and remedy in particular cases, including all pending actions based thereon.’

. . .

The critical point is that ‘the legislature may take away the right of action itself.’ . . . As noted above, we look to the substance of the legislation—not its label—to determine whether it operates as a repeal. . . . The pivotal issue is whether the legislation constitutes ‘a substantial reversal of legislative policy’ that ‘represents the adoption of an entirely new philosophy’ vis-à-vis the prior enactment.” Id. at 1024-25.

In its opening brief, defendant asserts that all four Zipperer factors cut in favor of abatement. Dkt. 37 at 14. To support that assertion, defendant proffers only a handful of case string cites and a brief reference to the 2020 California Voter Guide. Id.

In his opposition, plaintiff disagrees. Dkt. 43 at 10-11. First, plaintiff asserts that his claims resting on post-December 16, 2020 violations may survive at this stage of the litigation because “it is yet to be determined” whether defendant complied with Business & Professions Code § 7451’s four conditions. Id. at 10 n.1.

Second, plaintiff challenges defendant’s assertion that Business & Professions Code § 7451 satisfies the first and fourth Zipperer factors. In particular, plaintiff asserts that its misclassification allegation is premised not only on Labor Code § 2775 but also on

1 Dynamex. Id. at 10. Further, plaintiff argues that there has been “no repeal” of Labor
 2 Code § 2775, albeit expressly or by implication. Id. at 11. To support that argument,
 3 plaintiff relies on another California Supreme Court authority, Western Oil & Gas Ass’n v.
 4 Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control, 49 Cal. 3d 408 (1989) (“Western Oil”). Id.

5 In Western Oil, the California Supreme Court recognized that a statute may be 6 “repeal[ed] by implication.” Western Oil, 49 Cal. 3d at 419. It cautioned, however, that 7 “[a]ll presumptions are against” such a repeal. Id. It explained that “[t]he presumption is 8 strong where the prior act has been generally understood and acted upon.” Id.

9 The party arguing repeal bears the burden of overcoming this presumption. Id. at 10 420-22 (detailing shortcomings in appellant’s showing when rejecting that party’s 11 argument that subsequent authority impliedly repealed prior statutory authority). Such 12 party may meet that burden only if it shows that two conditions are present. First, “the 13 two acts must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two 14 cannot have concurrent operation . . . There must be no possibility of concurrent 15 operation.” Id. at 419-20 (emphasis in the original). Second, a subsequent statute must 16 “give[] undebatable evidence of an intent to supersede the earlier” statute. Id. at 420
 17 (emphasis in the original).

18 Plaintiff asserts that neither requirement for showing that Business Professions
 19 Code § 7451 impliedly repeals Labor Code § 2775 is met here. First, plaintiff argues that 20 both sections “can and do operate concurrently.” Dkt. 43 at 11. Plaintiff explains that 21 Labor Code § 2775 “mandates an ABC test for employee status” and Business &
 22 Professions Code § 7451 “creates a narrow exception to [Labor Code § 2775] that 23 applies only to certain ‘app-based drivers’ and only if the companies meet a set of 24 stringent conditions.” Dkt. 43 at 11 (emphasis in the original). Plaintiff also points out
 25 that Business & Professions Code § 7451 “does not preclude companies like [defendant]
 26 from electing to classify their drivers as employees if they so choose.” Id.

27 Second, plaintiff asserts that defendant lacks “undebatable evidence” proving that 28 Business & Professions Code § 7451 “was intended to affect [sic] a repeal of [Labor

1 Code § 2775] . . .” Id. at 11. In a footnote, plaintiff adds that defendant may not argue
2 that Business & Professions Code § 7451 “applies retroactively.” Id. at 11 n.2.

3 In its reply, defendant primarily focuses on the fourth Zipperer factor. Dkt. 44 at 4 10. First, defendant argues that Business & Professions Code § 7451 repealed Labor
5 Code § 2775 because the former section’s use of the prefatory clause “[n]otwithstanding 6 any other provision of law” shows that the “substance” of the former section sought to 7 “operate as an repeal.” Id. at 10-11.

8 Second, in a single paragraph, defendant characterizes plaintiff’s reliance on 9 Dynamex as an independent basis for his misclassification allegation as an “attempt[] to 10 split hairs.” Id. at 11. Defendant then summarily dismisses the doctrine of retroactivity as 11 “irrelevant” to its abatement argument. Id. at 12-13.

12 In their brief, Amici urge the court to reject defendant’s abatement argument for 13 multiple reasons. First, like plaintiff, Amici assert that Business & Professions Code §
14 7451 did not repeal Labor Code § 2775. 19-cv-8228, Dkt. 58-1 at 10-17.

15 More importantly, though, Amici expand on that argument. They add that 16 Business & Professions Code § 7451 did not repeal the wage orders interpreted and 17 relied on by the court in Dynamex when it articulated the ABC test for purposes of 18 classifying workers under California law. Id. at 14. To substantiate that assertion, Amici
19 address the conditions stated in Western Oil as necessary to show an implied repeal.

20 With respect to the first condition, Amici explain that defendant failed to offer any 21 evidence showing that California voters “intended to strip” drivers of their “right to wage
22 protections for work already performed while simultaneously guaranteeing wage
23 protections for future work.” Id. at 11. In relevant part, Amici criticize the 2020 California
24 Voter Guide as failing to even mention Labor Code § 2775. Id. at 11-12.

25 With respect to the second condition, Amici assert that defendant failed to show
26 that California Labor Code § 2775 has “no possibility of concurrent operation” with 27 Business & Professions Code § 7451 or the wage orders. Id. at 13-16. Amici explain 28 that Business & Professions Code § 7451 qualifies as a “specific statute” that, in some

1 circumstances, provides an “exception” to the “Labor Code and Wage Orders,” which 2 qualify as “general statutes upon which [drivers] rely for claims based on conduct before
3 [Business & Professions Code § 7451’s] passage.” Id. at 14. Amici elaborate that 4 Business & Professions Code § 7451 does not apply if a network company fails to satisfy 5 any one of its four conditions and that, in any event, such company may choose not to 6 comply with § 7451’s conditions and thus instead “be bound by the law created by 7 [California Labor Code § 2775].” Id.

8 Second, Amici assert that Business & Professions Code § 7451 does not abate 9 any authority underlying plaintiff’s misclassification allegation because that code contains 10 a general savings clause at Business & Professions Code § 4. Id. at 17. According to 11 Amici, Business & Professions Code § 12 extends § 4’s general savings clause to any 12 amendment to the Business & Professions Code, including, for example, § 7451. Id.

13 Third, Amici assert that, despite defendant’s contention, plaintiff’s claims are 14 premised in part on common law. Id. at 17-19. Amici acknowledge that Labor Code §
15 2775 appears statutory in nature and Dynamex interpreted California’s wage orders. Id.
16 at 18. Amici say, however, that both those authorities “merely clarified every worker’s 17 common law right to reasonable compensation for work performed.” Id. To support its 18 explanation, Amici cite Loehr v. Ventura Cty. Cmty. Coll. Dist., 147 Cal. App. 3d 1071
19 (1983) for the proposition that “earned but unpaid salary or wages are vested property
20 rights.” Id. Amici also cite Sims v. AT&T Mobility Servs. LLC, 955 F. Supp. 2d 1110
21 (E.D. Cal. 2013) for the proposition that “employees were entitled to recover unpaid 22 wages and overtime compensation at common law.” Id.

23 Fourth, Amici assert that Business & Professions Code § 7451 may not 24 “retroactively apply” to plaintiff’s misclassification allegation because such application
25 “would violate the Due Process Clause.” Id. at 19. According to Amici, plaintiff has a 26 “vested property right” in his “unpaid wages” and any “claim for those wages.” Id. Amici
27 suggest that, because a finding by this court that Business & Professions Code § 7451
28 retroactively applies would deprive plaintiff of his vested rights, the court should invoke

1 the doctrine of constitutional avoidance to “reject” such finding. Id. at 19-20.

2 In its response to Amici’s brief, defendant proffers six counterarguments. First,
3 defendant says that Amici’s brief does not address its abatement argument. Dkt. 50 at 2.

4 Second, defendant asserts that Amici mistakenly frame its abatement argument as 5 a retroactivity issue. Id. Defendant explains that the abatement doctrine focuses on 6 terminating a preexisting claim, whereas the retroactivity doctrine applies when a statute
7 imposes new liability for prior lawful actions. Id. To support that distinction, defendant
8 cites the California Supreme Court’s decision in Callet v. Alioto, 210 Cal. 65, 67 (1930)
9 (“Callet”). In that case, the California Supreme Court recognized the following principles:

10 It is too well settled to require citation of authority that in the 11 absence of a clearly expressed intention to the contrary, every 12 statute will be construed so as not to affect pending causes of 13 action. Or, as the rule is generally stated, every statute will be 14 construed to operate prospectively and will not be given a 15 retrospective effect, unless the intention that it should have that 16 effect is clearly expressed. It is also a general rule, subject to 17 certain limitations not necessary to discuss here, that a cause
18 of action or remedy dependent on a statute falls with a repeal 19 of the statute, even after the action thereon is pending, in the 20 absence of a saving clause in the repealing statute.

21 . . .

22 The justification for this rule is that all statutory remedies are 23 pursued with full realization that the Legislature may abolish the 24 right to recover at any time.

25 . . .

26 This rule only applies when the right in question is a statutory 27 right and does not apply to an existing right of action which has 28 accrued to a person under the rules of the common law, or by virtue of a statute codifying the common law. In such a case, it is generally stated that the cause of action is a vested property right which may not be impaired by legislation. In other words, the repeal of such a statute or of such a right should not be construed to affect existing causes of action. Callet, 210 Cal.
at 67-68 (emphasis added).

29 Third, defendant asserts that, for the abatement doctrine to apply, defendant need 30 not show that Business & Professions Code § 7451 repealed Labor Code § 2775. Dkt.
31 50 at 3. To the contrary, defendant explains, the abatement doctrine may extend to 32 circumstances when “voters leave the original language in a statute and merely create a

1 safe harbor for certain litigants because the voters still have taken away the right of 2 action itself.” Id. In any event, defendant asserts that Business & Professions Code §
3 7451 did repeal Labor Code § 2775. Id. at 3-4. Defendant says that the former section’s
4 use of the clause “notwithstanding any other provision of law” provides “undebatable
5 evidence” of an intent to supersede an earlier enactment. Id.

6 Fourth, defendant asserts that plaintiff may not rely on the Business & Professions
7 Code’s general savings clause to preserve his claims. Id. at 4. Citing Mann, defendant
8 argues that a claim resting on a superseded statute “falls . . . in the absence of a savings 9 clause in the repealing statute,” namely Business & Professions Code § 7451. Id.

10 Relatedly, defendant argues that the general savings clause provisions cited by 11 Amici (Business & Professions Code § 4 and § 12) instead sought only to preserve the 12 statutes in effect when the Business & Professions Code was created in 1937. Id. at 4.
13 To support that construction of those sections, defendant relies on a 2005 decision by 14 Judge Whyte, Palmer v. Stassimos, 419 F. Supp. 2d 1151 (N.D. Cal. 2005), to distinguish
15 the case law parenthetically cited by Amici to support its general savings clause 16 argument, Sobey v. Molony, 40 Cal. App. 2d 381 (1940). Defendant then adds that other 17 California codes contain identical provisions to those cited by Amici and that numerous 18 courts, interpreting such provisions, have “rejected arguments against abatement.” Id. at 19 5. Thus, defendant says, Amici’s proffered interpretation asks the court “to find every 20 case abating claims in the state over the last century . . . wrongly decided.” Id.

21 Fifth, defendant asserts that Amici’s argument about the common law nature of 22 plaintiff’s claim “just begs the question,” namely “whether plaintiff is an employee.” Id.
23 Defendant then asserts that the California Supreme Court predicated Dynamex on only 24 the wage orders. Id. at 6. Defendant suggests that plaintiff’s misclassification allegations
25 thus “derives solely from statute.” Id.

26 Sixth, defendant asserts that, if applied, the abatement doctrine would not violate
27 plaintiff’s rights under the Due Process Clause. Id. at 7. Defendant explains that Amici’s
28 Due Process concerns conflate the retroactivity doctrine with abatement and would arise

1 only when a statute attempts to “unwind a final judgment.” Id.

2 In its reply to defendant’s response, plaintiff proffers four rebuttals. First, plaintiff
3 asserts that Business & Professions Code § 7451 did not repeal Labor Code § 2775.
4 Dkt. 51 at 2-3. Citing now-partially abrogated authority, Stop Youth Addiction, Inc. v.
5 Lucky Stores, Inc., 17 Cal. 4th 553, 569 (1998), plaintiff argues that the court cannot find 6 an implied repeal here because defendant fails to proffer any evidence that voters
7 “intended to extinguish delivery drivers’ ability to bring misclassification actions to recover
8 unpaid wages earned before [Business & Professions Code § 7451] took effect.” Id. at 3.

9 Plaintiff adds that defendant’s reliance on Business & Profession Code § 7451’s
10 “notwithstanding any other provision of law” clause does not compel the inference it
11 “inten[ded] to repeal [Labor Code § 2775] with respect to app-based workers.” Id.
12 Plaintiff says that the court must construe that section in its broader statutory context. Id.

13 Second, plaintiff repeats Amici’s arguments concerning the purported applicability 14 of Business & Professions Code’s general savings clause. Dkt. 51 at 4. Plaintiff adds 15 that, because defendant “pitched [Business & Professions Code § 7451] to voters as a 16 change to the wage and hour benefits and protections owed to app-based workers,” the 17 court “should find an implied savings clause” in Business & Professions Code § 7451. Id.

18 Third, again parroting Amici, plaintiff asserts that his claims are “rooted in the 19 common law” and that he has a vested property interest in his unpaid wages. Id. at 5.
20 Tucked away in a footnote, plaintiff vaguely cross-cites Borella & Sons, Inc. v. Dep’t of 21 Indus. Rel., 48 Cal. 3d 341 (1989) and Dynamex for the proposition that the “ABC test
22 can be traced back to factors traditionally considered under the common law
23 misclassification test, including the right to control.” Id. at 5 n.5.

24 Fourth, plaintiff asserts that he maintains a vested property right to his unpaid 25 wages because “he already performed the work that is currently unpaid” and multiple 26 courts have indicated that “drivers are employees under the ABC test.” Id. at 5.

27 ///

28 ///

1                   b. The Court Cannot Reach a Final Resolution of the Abatement
 2                   Argument on the Present Record

3                   The court finds that the arguments and evidence proffered by both sides on this
 4 issue does not permit it to make a conclusive determination on whether Business &
 5 Professions Code § 7451 abates the authority underlying plaintiff’s misclassification
 6 allegation and, thus, his claims. Given that, the court denies defendant’s motion to the 7 extent it is premised on abatement. To guide the parties in any future motion for 8 summary judgment, the court details what it determines are the deficiencies in each 9 party’s position.

10                   i. Defendant Failed to Show that the Abatement Doctrine
 11                   Applies

12                   The court finds that defendant failed to show that the abatement doctrine applies 13 to plaintiff’s claims for at least three independent reasons.

14                   First, defendant fails to justify its assertion that plaintiff must affirmatively allege 15 defendant’s non-compliance with any of Business & Professions Code § 7451’s four 16 conditions when claiming that he qualifies as an employee under the Labor Code.

17                   As detailed above, the text of Business & Professions Code § 7451 states that “an 18 app-based driver is an independent contractor . . . if the following conditions are met . . .
 19 [setting forth four conditions].” Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 7451 (emphasis added). As 20 shown in bold, this section’s prefatory sentence is written in the passive voice. It does 21 not address whether the “app-based driver” or “network company” bears the burden of 22 showing that the four conditions are, or are not, satisfied.

23                   At oral argument, the court questioned counsel for defendant on this exact point.
 24 Counsel failed to identify any authority or legal justification to support defendant’s 25 construction. At best, counsel could say only that this section “clearly intended” to 26 reverse the ABC test and that, “unquestionably,” defendant fits within its four conditions.

27                   The court finds counsel’s summary assurances insufficient. Absent any authority, 28 the court rejects defendant’s argument that plaintiff must affirmatively allege defendant’s

1 non-compliance with the subject conditions in his complaint. Given that that argument
2 serves as the sole reason for defendant’s challenge to the actionability of any post-
3 December 16, 2020 violation, Dkt. 37 at 13; Dkt. 44 at 12 n.4, plaintiff may continue to 4 base his claims on such violations.

5 Second, defendant failed to show that the wage orders forming the basis of the 6 California Supreme Court’s decision in Dynamex do not—themselves—represent a 7 codification of pre-wage order California common law principles for purposes of 8 determining a worker’s employment classification. The court reviewed the portions of 9 Dynamex summarily cited by defendant in support of its position that “California’s ABC
10 test derives solely from statute.” Dkt. 50 at 6. Those portions merely footnote variations
11 in the ABC test across jurisdictions and describe the wage orders as legislative in nature.
12 The first description is irrelevant. And nobody seriously contests the second.

13 By arguing abatement, defendant asks this federal court to make an important
14 decision on a novel issue under state law. If defendant further pursues this argument, it 15 should explain why California common law principles do not independently support an 16 employment classification framework akin to the ABC test articulated in Dynamex.

17 That leads to a separate but related deficiency in defendant’s position. Defendant
18 also fails to explain how the Dynamex decision itself does not qualify as common law.
19 The court understands defendant’s citation to the California Supreme Court’s recent 20 characterization of Dynamex as a “judicial construction of a statute,” namely the wage 21 orders. Dkt. 50 at 6. Still, Dynamex is a decision by California’s highest court. Its 22 imprimatur on questions of California law carry exceptional weight. Indeed, the Ninth 23 Circuit recently characterized the ABC test articulated in Dynamex and subsequently 24 codified at Labor Code § 2775 as a “judge-made” test. California Trucking Ass’n v. Bonta, 25 996 F.3d 644, 649 (9th Cir. 2021) (“California’s Assembly Bill 5 (AB-5) codified a judge-
26 made test (referred to as the ‘ABC test’) for classifying workers as either employees or 27 independent contractors.”). Again, if defendant further pursues this argument, it must 28 explain why a state high court’s decision—independent of the statutory law on which it is

1 based—does not amount to sufficient authority to avoid the abatement.

2 Third, the court observes a shift in defendant’s position on whether, in the first
3 instance, the abatement doctrine requires that Business & Professions Code § 7451
4 repealed Labor Code § 2775 or the wage orders relied on to support plaintiff’s
5 misclassification allegation. In its opening brief, defendant characterizes Business &
6 Professions Code § 7451 as “effectively repeal[ing]” Labor Code § 2775 and thereby 7 “abat[ing]” all of plaintiff’s claims. Dkt. 37 at 9. Only after plaintiff points out the 8 requirements for showing an implied repeal, Dkt. 43 at 11, does defendant change
9 course, Dkt. 50 at 3. Pivoting, defendant says “abatement does not require a ‘repeal”
10 because the abatement doctrine “focuses on the substance of the legislation, not its label
11 or any magic words effectuating repeal.” Id. (emphasis in the original).

12 The court rejects defendant’s contention that it need not show a repeal to 13 substantiate its abatement argument. Defendant staked out its position in its opening 14 brief. The court will not now permit it to take an inconsistent one on reply.

15 That fairness concern aside, the authority that defendant itself cites to support its 16 latest argument tends to show that the abatement doctrine does require a repeal. In 17 Zipperer, the court characterized its fourth factor in terms of repeal. Zipperer, 133 Cal.
18 App. 4th at 1024-25. While only selectively cited by defendant, the court in that case 19 stated, in its entirety, “we look to the substance of the legislation—not its label—to 20 determine whether it operates as a repeal.” Id. at 1025 (emphasis added). The court in 21 Zipperer went on to hold that the statutory right at issue in that action “was eliminated by 22 the exemption provision, which operated as a valid repeal method.” Id. (emphasis 23 added).

24 With that preliminary issue decided, the next question is whether defendant
25 showed that Business & Professions Code § 7451 either expressly or impliedly repealed
26 Labor Code § 2775 and the wage orders relied on to support plaintiff’s misclassification
27 allegation. Defendant does not even attempt to argue that the former section expressly 28 repealed the latter. Thus, the viability of defendant’s position on this issue turns on

1 whether it can show a repeal by implication.

2 The court concludes that defendant failed to satisfy either of the two requirements
3 underlying the implied repeal doctrine. With respect to the first requirement, defendant's
4 argument that Business & Professions Code § 7451's "notwithstanding any other
5 provision of law" clause, Dkt. 50 at 3, assumes that that section applies to all labor
6 arrangements in the first instance. It does not. As detailed above, that section delineates
7 four conditions that are necessary to its application. That section says nothing about its 8 application in the event any one condition is not satisfied. In that event, the court may 9 only reasonably construe that section not to apply. In turn, the "notwithstanding any other 10 provision of law" clause (the lynchpin of defendant's argument) is irrelevant, thereby 11 permitting the "concurrent operation" of Labor Code § 2775 and the wage orders.

12 Defendant also does not address Amici's argument that, even if Business &
13 Professions Code § 7451's four conditions were satisfied, that section does not require a 14 network company to treat a worker as an independent contractor. Given that, it appears 15 that a network company may, in any event, opt to proceed on an employer-employee
16 basis. That option undermines any inference that Business & Professions Code § 7451
17 (on the one hand) and Labor Code § 2775 and the wage orders (on the other hand) are 18 mutually exclusive of one another.

19 With respect to the second requirement, defendant falls short of proffering 20 "undebatable evidence" that Business & Professions Code § 7451 "inten[ded] to 21 supersede" Labor Code § 2775 and the wage orders interpreted in Dynamex. The 2020
22 California Voter Guide does not appear to address or otherwise refer to either of the latter 23 statutory authorities when describing Proposition 22 to voters. But even if it had,
24 defendant fails to offer any evidence to support the necessary intermediate inference that 25 voters actually reviewed and relied on that guide before voting. As recent years have 26 shown, voters can receive (dis)information from multiple sources.

27 Separately, the court finds it notable that defendant fails to offer any evidence
28 addressing the intent of those who drafted Proposition 22. In its brief, Amici raise serious

1 extrinsic factual questions about defendant's role in the proposition's origination, public
 2 promulgation, and passage. Indeed, those questions implicate important issues on which 3 plaintiff should have the full opportunity to take discovery before the court makes any 4 blanket conclusion about Business & Professions Code § 7451's "intent."

5 For the above three reasons, the court rejects defendant's argument that Business
 6 & Professions Code § 7451 abates plaintiff's claims.

7 ii. Plaintiff Failed to Conclusively Establish that the 8 Abatement Doctrine Does Not Apply

9 Plaintiff need not affirmatively establish that the abatement doctrine does not apply
 10 for his action to proceed. However, in anticipation that defendant will renew its 11 abatement argument on a motion for summary judgment, the court provides these 12 comments regarding the arguments raised by plaintiff and Amici.

13 First, plaintiff mistakenly suggests that defendant must proffer evidence that 14 "either the Legislature or California voters intended to extinguish delivery drivers' ability to 15 bring misclassification actions to recover unpaid wages earned before [Business &
 16 Professions Code § 7451] took effect." Dkt. 51 at 2-3 (emphasis added). That 17 suggestion misunderstands the relevant issue for determining an implied repeal.
 18 Defendant must show evidence of an "intent to supersede" an earlier statute. Western 19 Oil, 49 Cal. 3d at 410. That condition says nothing about the need for evidence relating 20 to voters' intent to terminate preexisting claims resting on the earlier statute.

21 Second, plaintiff fails to address defendant's argument that the general savings
 22 clause detailed in Business & Professions Code § 4 and § 12 preserves only the statutory 23 authority that predated the 1937 codification of the Business & Professions Code. As 24 defendant points out, at least one court has construed Business & Profession Code § 4 25 as "not appear[ing] to operate as a savings clause to alterations to statutes already 26 enacted." Palmer v. Stassinis, 419 F.Supp.2d 1151, 1157 (N.D. Cal. 2005). In light of 27 the above, the court would likely conclude that the Business & Professions Code's 28 general savings clause does not apply to § 7451.

1 The court is similarly not persuaded by plaintiff’s implied savings clause argument.
2 Like defendant’s implied repeal argument, that position depends on evidence of voter
3 intent for passing Proposition 22. Plaintiff may revisit that argument on a motion for 4 summary judgment following an opportunity for discovery.

5 Third, Amici appear to conflate defendant’s abatement and repeal arguments with 6 a retroactivity issue. 19-cv-8228, Dkt. 58-1 at 7 (“Apparently recognizing that [Business &
7 Professions Code § 7451] is not retroactive . . . [defendant] invokes the ‘statutory repeal’
8 doctrine, which holds that a complete repeal of the statute on which a claim is based may 9 retroactively ‘abate’ that claim.”) (emphasis added).

10 The retroactivity doctrine is distinct from its abatement and repeal counterparts.
11 As explained in Mann, the abatement doctrine focuses on extinguishing preexisting but 12 unvested claims resting solely on statute. Mann, 18 Cal. 3d at 829 (“[T]he courts
13 correlatively hold under the common law that when a pending action rests solely on a 14 statutory basis, and when no rights have vested under the statute, ‘a repeal of the statute
15 without a saving clause will terminate all pending actions based thereon.’”). The theory 16 underlying that principle is intuitive—what a legislature gives, a legislature may take.
17 Callet, 210 Cal. 65, 67-68 (“The justification for this rule is that all statutory remedies are 18 pursued with full realization that the Legislature may abolish the right to recover at any 19 time.”). As articulated in Western Oil, the repeal doctrine simply provides the analytical 20 framework to determine whether a subsequent statute renders legally inoperative its 21 earlier counterpart. Western Oil, 49 Cal. 3d at 419-22.

22 That said, when describing the retroactivity concerns, the court in Evangelatos 23 stated that it “is an established canon of interpretation that statutes are not to be given a 24 retrospective operation unless it is clearly made to appear that such was the legislative 25 intent.” 44 Cal. 3d at 1207. Without more, then, the retroactivity and abatement 26 doctrines appear the same. Yet, when construing the abatement doctrine articulated in 27 Mann, the court in Zipperer indicated a difference in those doctrines. 133 Cal. App. 4th at 28 1023 (“In other words, where ‘the Legislature has conferred a remedy and withdraws it by

1 amendment or repeal of the remedial statute, the new statutory scheme may be applied
2 to pending actions without triggering retrospectivity concerns.”) (emphasis added).

3 More recently, the California Supreme Court in McClung v. Employment Dev.
4 Dep’t, 34 Cal. 4th 467 (2004) stated that “[t]he presumption against statutory retroactivity
5 has consistently been explained by reference to the unfairness of imposing new 6 burdens on persons after the fact.” Id. at 475 (emphasis added). Thus, it appears that 7 the retroactivity doctrine focuses on limiting a subsequent statute’s ability to impose
8 additional obligations or liability for prior conduct that was lawful under an earlier statute.

9 Here, neither side asserts that Business & Professions Code § 7451 imposes any 10 additional obligation on plaintiff. Given that, it does not appear that the retroactivity 11 doctrine is at issue.

12 Fourth, Amici and plaintiff overstate the significance of Loehr and Sims when 13 asserting that plaintiff’s claims are common law in nature. Both cases are inapposite. In 14 Loehr, plaintiff was uncontestably a former employee of the defendant school district from 15 which he sought unpaid wages. Loehr, 147 Cal. App. 3d at 1076. In Sims, Judge 16 Mendez simply commented on the secondary question of whether an employee could 17 recover unpaid wages under California common law. Sims, 955 F. Supp. 2d at 1117
18 (“The foregoing authority demonstrates that employees were entitled to recover unpaid 19 wages and overtime compensation at common law.”) (emphasis added)). Neither 20 authority considered the threshold question at issue here—namely, whether the 21 complaining worker qualifies as an employee under common law.

22 One final note. With respect to Amici’s Due Process clause argument, the court
23 does not offer any opinion. It appears, however, that such concerns arise only if plaintiff
24 qualifies as an employee. 19-cv-8228, Dkt. 58-1 at 19 (“Finally, to the extent Prop 22 did
25 apply retroactively, it would violate the Due Process Clause. In California, unpaid wages 26 are the employee’s property once they are earned and payable.”) (emphasis added).

27 * * *

28 In short, the court finds that the present record does not support a conclusive

1 determination on defendant's abatement argument. Accordingly, except as limited in 2 Sections B.2.-B.5. below, plaintiff may proceed on his claims for all alleged pre- and post-
 3 December 16, 2020 Labor Code violations. The court will now analyze the sufficiency of 4 the allegations proffered by plaintiff in support of each claim.

5 2. Claim for Failure to Pay Business Expenses

6 In relevant part, Labor Code § 2802 requires an employer to:

7 [I]ndemnify his or her employee for all necessary expenditures 8 or losses incurred by the employee in direct consequence of the discharge of his or her duties . . . Cal. Lab. Code § 2802(a).

9 In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified two deficiencies in this claim.
 10 Dkt. 30 at 4-5. First, plaintiff failed to allege that he himself incurred any expense when 11 making deliveries or that defendant failed to reimburse him for such expenses. Id. at 4.
 12 Second, plaintiff failed to allege that the expenses he incurred were necessary to or in 13 consequence of his job duties. Id. at 4-5.

14 In his FAC, plaintiff adds six allegations to this claim. FAC ¶¶ 26-31. Among 15 them, plaintiff alleges that defendant has not reimbursed him. Id. ¶ 26. He further 16 identifies various categories of costs that he incurred in connection with his deliveries. Id.
 17 ¶¶ 27-31. Such costs include gas, id. ¶ 27, tires, id. ¶ 28, and cell phone data, id. ¶ 30.

18 Defendant does not challenge the sufficiency of the allegations underlying this 19 claim. The court can reasonably infer that plaintiff's alleged expenses qualify as 20 necessary and consequential to his delivery responsibilities. Given the above, the court 21 concludes that plaintiff remedied the defects identified in the December 7, 2020 order and 22 has stated a claim for failure to reimburse business expenses.

23 3. Claims for Failure to Pay Minimum and Overtime Wages

24 In relevant part, California Labor Code § 1194 provides the following:

25 Notwithstanding any agreement to work for a lesser wage, any 26 employee receiving less than the legal minimum wage or the 27 legal overtime compensation applicable to the employee is 28 entitled to recover in a civil action the unpaid balance of the full amount of this minimum wage or overtime compensation, including interest thereon, reasonable attorney's fees, and costs of suit. Cal. Lab. Code § 1194(a).

1                   a. Failure to Pay Minimum Wage

2           In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified two deficiencies in plaintiff's
3 claim for failure to pay minimum wage. Dkt. 30 at 7-10. First, plaintiff based his minimum
4 wage calculation on his accrual of "expenses for mileage driven." Id. at 7. The court 5 explained that, because plaintiff failed to show that he was entitled to reimbursement for 6 any such expenses, his minimum wage calculation was necessarily deficient. Id.

7           Second, plaintiff failed to explain why "all of his time spent on the Uber Eats
8 Application," particularly his time spent "driving between deliveries while awaiting the next 9 delivery assignment," qualifies as compensable under California law. Id. at 7-10. The 10 court extensively detailed Wage Order 9's definition of "hours worked" and concluded that 11 plaintiff failed to explain how or why the subject time falls within the "subject to the 12 control" or "suffered or permitted to work" clauses of Wage Order 9. Id. at 8-10.

13           In his FAC, plaintiff adds five allegations to this claim. FAC ¶¶ 32-34, 36-37.
14 Plaintiff alleges that he is subject to defendant's control while awaiting requests for three 15 reasons. First, plaintiff must remain logged into the Uber Eats App between deliveries
16 because that conduct is "the only way for him" to receive new assignments. Id. ¶ 32-33.

17           Second, plaintiff is "not able to freely engage in personal errands or activities"
18 while awaiting requests because defendant "requires that drivers either accept or reject
19 delivery assignments that Uber Eats populates . . . within several seconds." Id. ¶ 33.
20 Plaintiff explains that if drivers "do not respond to these delivery assignment requests,
21 their 'acceptance rate' will decline, which may ultimately lead to disciplinary measures
22 like suspension or termination." Id. Plaintiff later adds that he does not perform personal 23 errands while waiting between orders "so that he is available to respond to Uber Eats'
24 delivery assignment and avoid a low acceptance rate." Id. ¶ 34.

25           Third, plaintiff alleges that his time between deliveries is "primarily" for defendant's 26 benefit because, "unless [plaintiff] and other drivers remain logged into the App between 27 deliveries, [defendant] would not have anyone to send delivery assignments and, thus,
28 there would be no one to bring [defendant's] customer their food." Id. ¶ 33.

1 Separate from the above-listed additions, plaintiff maintains his original complaint's
 2 allegations pertaining to defendant's control over how he conducts his work. Id. ¶¶ 15-
 3 17, 21-25. Notably, plaintiff alleges that defendant "may suspend or terminate delivery
 4 drivers who do not accept enough deliveries . . ." Id. ¶ 25.

5 Independent of his control allegations, plaintiff identifies the July 27, 2020 through 6 August 2, 2020 workweek as a particular period that he did not receive minimum wage.
 7 Id. ¶ 37. When making that allegation, plaintiff identifies his effective hourly wage rate
 8 both with and without accounting for the time spent on the Uber Eats App between 9 deliveries. Id. Plaintiff alleges both sets of figures with and without mileage deductions
 10 at the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") standard rate. Id. Under those calculations, 11 plaintiff alleges the following effective wage rates:

- 12 • When including time spent between deliveries: $10.78 (pre-expense deduction)
 13 and $6.59 (post-expense deduction). Id.
- 14 • When excluding time spent between deliveries: $11.02 (pre-expense deduction)
 15 and $ 6.74 (post-expense deduction). Id.

16 Here, the court concludes that plaintiff has alleged a cognizable claim for failure to 17 pay minimum wage. The court further holds that plaintiff may base such claim on both the 18 time that he spent actively engaged in deliveries (i.e., picking up and dropping off food)
 19 and the time that he spent on the Uber Eats App waiting for requests between deliveries 20 for the reasons that follow.

21 i. Plaintiff's Alleged Waiting Time May Qualify as "Hours
 22 Worked"

23 As used in Wage Order 9, the term "Hours Worked" contains two clauses to 24 determine whether certain time qualifies as compensable work time under California.
 25 Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8, § 11090. First, that definition extends to "the time during which an 26 employee is subject to the control of an employer." Id. Second, it includes "all the time 27 the employee is suffered or permitted to work, whether or not required to do so." Id. The 28 California Supreme Court has explained that the "control of an employer" clause and the

1 “suffered or permitted to work” clause establish “independent factors, each of which
2 defines whether certain time spent is compensable as ‘hours worked.’” Frlekin v. Apple
3 Inc., 8 Cal. 5th 1038, 1046 (2020), reh'g denied (May 13, 2020).

4 In this case, plaintiff asserts only that his waiting time is compensable under the 5 subject to the control of an employer clause. FAC ¶¶ 25, 32-33. Plaintiff does not refer 6 to the suffered or permitted to work clause. Given that election, the court will analyze the 7 sufficiency of his allegations under only the former clause when determining whether the 8 subject waiting time qualifies as compensable under California law.

9 The California Supreme Court has explained that an employee is subject to the 10 control of its employer when such employer “directs, commands, or restrains an 11 employee from leaving the workplace . . . and thus prevents the employee from using the 12 time effectively for his or her own purposes.” Mendiola v. CPS Sec. Sols., Inc., 60 Cal.
13 4th 833, 840 (2015). In Mendiola, the California Supreme Court identified the following 14 factors as relevant to determine whether an employer maintains control over an 15 employee during his or her on-call time:

- 16 • Whether there was an on-premises living requirement.
- 17 • Whether there were excessive geographical restrictions on employee's 18 movements.
- 19 • Whether the frequency of calls was unduly restrictive.
- 20 • Whether a fixed time limit for response was unduly restrictive.
- 21 • Whether the on-call employee could easily trade on-call responsibilities.
- 22 • Whether use of a pager could ease restrictions.
- 23 • Whether the employee had actually engaged in personal activities during call-in 24 time.
- 25 • Whether the on-call waiting time . . . is spent primarily for the benefit of the 26 employer and its business. Id. at 841.

27 More recently, in Frlekin, the California Supreme Court expanded on the above 28 factors. It found that additional indication of employer control includes:

- 1 • Whether some employee activity is “mandatory in nature.”
- 2 • Whether the activity is “enforced through disciplinary measures.” 8 Cal. 5th at
- 3 1056.

4 The court concludes that plaintiff’s allegations pertaining to the fourth and seventh
 5 Mendiola factors and both Frlekin factors support a plausible inference that defendant
 6 exercises control over him during the time that he spends on the Uber Eats App waiting
 7 for requests between deliveries.

8 First, at paragraph 33, plaintiff plausibly alleges that he faces potential discipline
 9 for not responding to a request within a set period. As noted above, plaintiff asserts that 10 defendant requires drivers to “either accept or reject” a delivery request “within several 11 seconds.” FAC ¶ 33. Then, immediately following that assertion, plaintiff adds that “if 12 drivers . . . do not respond to these delivery assignments request, their ‘acceptance rate’
 13 will decline, which may ultimately lead to disciplinary measures . . .” Id.

14 At the outset, the court notes the indefinite and ambiguous nature of these 15 assertions. Plaintiff does not allege that he will face a risk of discipline if he fails to 16 respond to a request within several seconds. He alleges only that he faces such risk if 17 he fails to respond. However, the court can and will infer that the referenced discipline 18 extends both to a failure to respond (generally) and a failure to respond within a set 19 period.

20 In terms of the plausibility of the referenced discipline, plaintiff does not elaborate
 21 on the likelihood that such discipline would materialize. He asserts only that the risk of it
 22 “may” exist. The court finds that—under the circumstances at hand—that assertion
 23 satisfies Iqbal/Twombly’s plausibility requirement. Ashcroft, 556 U.S. at 679 24 (“Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will, as the Court of 25 Appeals observed, be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on 26 its judicial experience and common sense.”).

27 The court understands that any information pertaining to defendant’s disciplinary 28 practices might be in its exclusive possession and, thus, outside the realm of information

1 available to render a verified allegation definitively asserting the subject disciplinary risk.
2 Further, the court prefers to conclusively decide the waiting time compensability issue
3 after the parties have an opportunity to develop an evidentiary record substantiating (or 4 negating) the veracity of plaintiff's control allegations.

5 Separate but relatedly, the court rejects defendant's fallback contention that the 6 mere act of responding to a request cannot, in any event, qualify as sufficiently restrictive
7 to show control. As articulated in Mendiola, the touchstone for control is whether an 8 employment condition "prevents the employee from using the time effectively for his or 9 her own purposes." Mendiola, 60 Cal. at 833. Without an evidentiary record, the court
10 cannot determine the invasiveness that having to respond to a request imposes on a 11 driver's ability to conduct his or her personal affairs between deliveries. In light of the 12 above, the court finds that paragraph 33 supports an inference of control under 13 Mendiola's fourth factor and both Frlekin factors.

14 Second, at paragraph 34, plaintiff expressly alleges that he "does not perform
15 personal errands or activities while he is waiting between orders . . ." FAC ¶ 34.
16 Accordingly, the court finds that paragraph 34 supports an inference of control under 17 Mendiola's seventh factor.

18 Third, at paragraph 25, plaintiff plausibly alleges that he faces potential discipline if 19 he "do[es] not accept enough deliveries." Id. ¶ 25. The court emphasizes that this 20 alleged risk of discipline, which pertains to accepting some number of deliveries, is 21 distinct from the corollary risk he purportedly faces for not responding to a request within 22 seconds. Compare Id. ¶ 33. If imposed, paragraph 25's alleged quota presupposes that 23 plaintiff wait on the Uber Eats App between deliveries for a subsequent request. That 24 incidental requirement, in turn, implies that the subject waiting time is mandatory.
25 Accordingly, the court finds that paragraph 25 separately supports an inference of control
26 under both Frlekin factors.

27 Finally, for purposes of guiding the parties in future litigation, the court points out
28 that plaintiff's allegations concerning the remaining Mendiola factors fail to support an

1 inference of control. With respect to the first and second Mendiola factors, plaintiff does 2 not identify any geographical restriction imposed on him by defendant when logged onto 3 the Uber Eats App and awaiting requests. While plaintiff argues such a restriction in his 4 opposition, Dkt. 43 at 15-16, he omits any like assertion from his verified pleadings.

5 With respect to the third, fifth, and sixth Mendiola factors, plaintiff fails to proffer
6 any relevant allegation. That leaves only the eighth Mendiola factor. Plaintiff might be 7 correct that defendant's business would fold without drivers waiting for requests between 8 deliveries. Id. ¶ 33. Defendant cannot contest that it monetarily benefits each time a 9 driver waits for an additional request. But plaintiff's allegation does not establish that the 10 subject wait time is primarily for defendant's benefit. Plaintiff also receives money when 11 he provides rides. He does not explain how or why defendant benefits relatively more 12 than he does from waiting for the next ride. Absent that, plaintiff cannot establish that the 13 eighth Mendiola factor supports an inference of control.

14 Those shortcomings aside, the court concludes that plaintiff proffered sufficient 15 facts from which to plausibly infer that defendant controls him during the subject waiting 16 time under the fourth and seventh Mendiola factors and both Frlekin factors. Accordingly, 17 plaintiff has shown that the waiting time at issue may qualify as compensable under 18 California law. Given that, plaintiff may proceed on his claim for failure to pay minimum 19 wage based on both the time spent actively engaged in deliveries and that spent waiting
20 for requests between deliveries.

21 The court expressly limits this holding to the procedural posture at hand. Plaintiff
22 alleges just enough facts to support a plausible inference that defendant exercises
23 control over him during the subject waiting time. In the event a motion for summary 24 judgment shows that plaintiff cannot substantiate such allegations, the court may narrow 25 this claim to only the time spent actively engaged in deliveries.

26 ii. Plaintiff Cured the Remaining Deficiencies in His Claim
27 for Failure to Pay Minimum Wage

28 At paragraph 37, plaintiff identifies the July 27, 2020 through August 2, 2020

1 workweek as a particular period during which he did not receive minimum wage. Plaintiff
 2 alleges that, when accounting for the time spent waiting between requests, he effectively 3 received $10.78 (pre-business expenses) and $6.59 (post-businesses expenses) for 4 each hour spent on the Uber Eats App. Id. Plaintiff alternatively alleges that, when 5 excluding such wait time, he effectively received $11.02 (pre-business expenses) or 6 $6.74 (post-business expenses) for each such hour. Id.

7 Under all accounting methods, plaintiff alleges an effective wage rate that falls
 8 below the $13 per hour required under California law in 2020.<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, the court
 9 finds that plaintiff cured the remaining deficiencies identified in his claim for failure to pay
 10 minimum wage. Thus, plaintiff may proceed on this claim in its entirety.

11 b. Failure to Pay Overtime Wages

12 In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified five deficiencies in plaintiff's
 13 claim for failure to pay overtime. Dkt. 30 at 10-11. First, plaintiff failed to satisfy the rule
 14 set forth in Landers v. Quality Commc'ns, Inc., 771 F.3d 638 (9th Cir. 2014), as amended
 15 (Jan. 26, 2015) ("Landers") that he identify a given workweek that he worked over 40
 16 hours without overtime compensation. Id. at 10. Second, plaintiff failed to provide 17 additional supporting detail to allege a plausible claim for failure to pay overtime. Id.
 18 Third, plaintiff based this claim in part on the time spent waiting between deliveries. Id.
 19 Fourth, plaintiff failed to allege that he himself was deprived of overtime pay. Id. at 11.
 20 Fifth, plaintiff failed to allege that his purported overtime included only his performance of 21 tasks that qualify as legally compensable. Id.

22 In his FAC, plaintiff adds two allegations uniquely in support of his claim for failure
 23 to pay overtime. FAC ¶¶ 39-40. First, plaintiff clarifies that he worked 44 hours and two 24 minutes "for the week of February 3, 2020 to February 9, 2020," not "February 3, 2020 to 25 February 10, 2020" as he previously mistakenly alleged. Id. ¶ 39 n.4. Plaintiff alleges that 26 the above-referenced 44 hours included "time spent between deliveries while awaiting 27

28 <sup>3</sup> https://www.dir.ca.gov/dlse/faq\_minimumwage.htm

1 the next delivery assignment.” Id.

2 At paragraph 40, plaintiff identifies three other particular days that he worked in 3 excess of eight hours while “driving to pick up deliveries [and] driving to drop off
4 deliveries only.” Id. ¶ 40 (right column in chart). While not expressly stated in the FAC,
5 plaintiff relies on the same waiting time compensability allegations (id. ¶¶ 32-34) proffered
6 in support of his minimum wage claim to support his overtime hours calculation.

7 The court concludes that plaintiff proffered sufficient facts to state a claim for 8 failure to pay overtime. Importantly, plaintiff identified a specific workweek in which he 9 spent over 40 hours both actively engaged in deliveries and waiting for requests. Id. ¶
10 39. Separately, while not necessary given the court’s conclusion at Section 3.a.i. about 11 the compensability of plaintiff’s waiting time, he also identifies particular days in which he 12 spent over eight hours actively engaged in deliveries. Id. ¶ 40.

13 Given the above, plaintiff may proceed on his claim for failure to pay overtime
14 wages in its entirety. The court reiterates that, following a motion for summary judgment, 15 it may narrow this claim to only the overtime spent actively engaged in deliveries.

16 4. Claim for Failure to Provide Accurate Wage Statements

17 California Labor Code § 226 requires an employer to periodically provide its 18 employee an accurate itemized statement in writing that details various categories of 19 information. Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a). Such categories include: (1) gross wages earned;
20 (2) total hours worked; (3) applicable deductions; (4) net wages earned; and (5) all 21 applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period. Id. To state a claim under § 226,
22 a plaintiff must allege an injury that resulted from the employer’s knowing and intentional
23 failure to comply with the above requirements. Id. § 226(e)(1). An employee suffers an 24 injury if the employer fails to provide a wage statement. Id. § 226(e)(2)(A).

25 In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified four deficiencies in plaintiff’s
26 claim for failure to provide accurate wage statements. Dkt. 30 at 11-12. First, plaintiff did
27 not dispute that this claim is viable only if his other claims for violation of the Labor Code 28 are viable. Id. Second, plaintiff failed to proffer any non-conclusory facts in support of 1 this claim. Id. at 12. Third, plaintiff failed to allege that he himself was deprived of an 2 accurate wage statement. Id. Fourth, plaintiff failed to provide any detail about the 3 information available in the Uber Eats App. Id.

4 In his FAC, plaintiff adds one allegation to this claim. FAC ¶ 42. In it, plaintiff
5 explains that his pay statements are accessible only through the Uber Eats App. Id.
6 According to plaintiff, such statements detail the following information:

- 7 • Summary of his earnings.
- 8 • Trip balances.
- 9 • Promotional deals that defendant applied to a delivery.
- 10 • A list of all deliveries made during the statement period with the date and time the 11 order was accepted.
- 12 • Trip ID.
- 13 • The earning per delivery. Id.

14 Plaintiff also alleges that information about his “total hours worked (as defined in 15 [paragraph] 32)” is absent from his pay statements. Id. Plaintiff adds that these 16 statements do not specify the amount of time plaintiff spent picking up or delivering food
17 or include his hourly wages. Id. Lastly, plaintiff notes that, to determine the time spent 18 performing deliveries, he had to log onto the Uber Eats App and manually take the 19 difference between each trip’s start and end time and then sum such differences. Id. n.5.

20 In its motion, defendant challenges this claim on two bases. First, defendant
21 asserts that this claim fails because it is “derivative” of the minimum wage and overtime
22 claims. Dkt. 37 at 21. Second, defendant asserts that, at minimum, plaintiff may not 23 predicate this claim on time spent between deliveries. Id. at 22.

24 The court concludes that plaintiff proffered sufficient facts to state a claim for 25 failure to provide accurate wage statements. Importantly, as decided above, plaintiff has 26 alleged cognizable claims for failure to pay minimum and overtime wages. At this stage 27 in the litigation, plaintiff may base such claims on both his time spent actively engaged in 28 deliveries and that spent waiting for requests between deliveries. Accordingly, the court

1 finds that plaintiff may proceed on this claim without qualification.

2 5. Business & Professions Code § 17200 Claim

3 California Business & Professions Code § 17200 generally prohibits business
4 practices that are unlawful, unfair, or deceptive. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. A
5 practice is unlawful if it is forbidden by law. Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 98
6 Cal. App. 4th 1158, 1170 (2002). Given that, § 17200 “creates an independent action
7 when a practice violates some other law.” Id.

8 In his FAC, plaintiff alleges a materially similar § 17200 claim premised on 9 unlawful conduct to that advanced in his original complaint. Compare Compl. ¶¶ 57-60
10 with FAC ¶¶ 66-69. In particular, plaintiff alleges that defendant violated the various 11 Labor Code sections underlying the direct claims analyzed above. FAC ¶ 67. Those 12 sections include Labor Code § 2802 (failure to reimburse business expenses), § 1194
13 (failure to pay minimum wage and overtime), and § 226 (failure to provide an accurate
14 wage statement). Id. Independent of those sections, plaintiff also alleges that defendant 15 violates Labor Code § 226.8 (willful misclassification of employment status), § 246 (failure 16 to provide sick leave), and § 1197.1 (penalty for failure to pay minimum wage). Id.<sup>4</sup>

17 In its motion, defendant challenges the § 17200 claim on two major grounds. First,
18 defendant asserts that plaintiff may not base his § 17200 claim on the same Labor Code
19 sections that he relies on to support his direct claims. To support that assertion, 20 defendant explains that plaintiff failed to show that he lacks an adequate legal remedy.
21 Dkt. 37 at 22-23. Second, defendant asserts that plaintiff may not rely on the various 22 other purportedly violated Labor Code sections for other independent reasons.

23 ///

24 ///

25 _____
26 <sup>4</sup> In his FAC, plaintiff summarily alleges that defendant violated other Labor Code
27 sections, including Labor Code §§ 1198, 510, 554, 1197, 1182.12, and 1194.2. In their 28 briefing, neither party expressly analyzes whether such allegations may serve as an adequate basis to support the § 17200 claim. Given those omissions, as well as the fact that plaintiff’s allegations concerning those sections are conclusory and unsupported, the court concludes that those sections are insufficient to support this claim.

1                    a. Plaintiff Failed to Show that He Lacks an Adequate Legal 2                    Remedy for the Violations Underlying His Labor Code Claims

3                    In its December 7, 2020 order, the court held that plaintiff may not base his §
 4                    17200 claim on the alleged violation of Labor Code § 226.8 and § 246 because he failed
 5                    to show that he lacked an adequate legal remedy for such violations. Dkt. 30 at 14, 16.

6                    In his FAC, plaintiff adds one paragraph in support of the § 17200 claim. FAC ¶ 2.
 7                    n.1. In it, plaintiff chiefly alleges that the statute of limitations for a § 17200 claim is four 8                    years, while the limitation is three years for claims brought under the Labor Code and one
 9                    year for claims brought under the Private Attorney Generals Act (“PAGA”), Labor Code §
 10                    2698. Id. Thus, plaintiff says, his § 17200 claim is necessary “to recover for at least one 11                    year of damages on behalf of the putative class.” Id.

12                    The court concludes that plaintiff still fails to show that he lacks an adequate legal 13                    remedy. Importantly, plaintiff fails to identify any binding authority to support his position
 14                    that an incongruity in the statute of limitations between a direct Labor Code claim and § 15                    17200 claim premised on a Labor Code violation may serve as a cognizable basis to 16                    conclude that he lacks an adequate legal remedy for his direct claims. To the extent 17                    plaintiff relies on Audrey Heredia v. Sunrise Senior Living, LLC, 2021 WL 819159 (C.D.
 18                    Cal. Feb. 10, 2021) to support that position, Dkt. 43 at 22, such reliance is misplaced. In 19                    that case, Judge Staton simply observed plaintiff’s argument about differences in the 20                    statute of limitations. Id. at 5. Indeed, in that decision, she ultimately dismissed the 21                    subject § 17200 claim with prejudice. Id. (“For these reasons, Plaintiffs’ claim for 22                    equitable restitution under the UCL is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.”).

23                    Defendant, on the other hand, identifies recent district court authority explicitly 24                    ruling that “plaintiffs cannot persuasively argue that they lack an adequate remedy at law
 25                    even when their claims under the California Labor Code are barred by the statute of 26                    limitations.” Franckowiak v. Scenario Cockram USA, Inc., 2020 WL 9071697, at *3 (C.D.
 27                    Cal. Nov. 30, 2020). Of course, Franckowiak does not bind this court. That said, the 28                    court finds it persuasive. Importantly, if plaintiff were correct that a difference in the

1 statute of limitations is sufficient to show the absence of an adequate legal remedy under 2 the Labor Code, then such showing would undermine the function of a shorter statute of 3 limitations featured in a direct legal claim. The court finds that consequence untenable.

4 For the above reasons, the court concludes that plaintiff failed to show that he 5 lacks an adequate legal remedy for his alleged violations of Labor Code § 2802, § 1194,
 6 and § 226. Given that, the court dismisses the § 17200 claim to the extent based on 7 those sections.

8 Separate but relatedly, as explained below, the court finds that the § 17200 claim 9 premised on violation of Labor Code § 226.8 and § 246 fails for other reasons. Thus, the 10 court need not consider the remaining allegations in paragraph two footnote one 11 concerning the purported unavailability of a legal remedy for those sections.

12 b. Plaintiff Failed to State a § 17200 Claim Premised on a Violation
 13 of Labor Code § 226.8

14 Labor Code § 226.8 makes it unlawful for an employer to engage in “willful
 15 misclassification of an individual as an independent contractor.” Cal. Lab. Code §
 16 226.8(a). In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified two deficiencies in the § 17 17200 claim premised on a violation of Labor Code § 226.8. First, plaintiff failed to show
 18 why defendant’s conduct lobbying state officials for an exception from Labor Code § 2775
 19 shows that it willfully violated any applicable labor law law. Dkt. 30 at 13-14. Second,
 20 plaintiff failed to show that he lacked an adequate legal remedy for a violation Labor 21 Code § 226.8. Id. at 14-15. Critically, the court explained that “plaintiff could have 22 pursued civil penalties for past violations of § 226.8 through the Private Attorneys 23 General Act . . .” but he chose not to do so. Id. at 15.

24 In his FAC, plaintiff adds two allegations to support this claim. First, plaintiff 25 alleges that he lacks an adequate legal remedy to vindicate defendant’s violations of 26 Labor Code § 226.8 (and § 246) because “none of his other legal claims would afford him 27 damages or restitution” to redress defendant’s willful misclassification of his employment 28 or failure to provide him sick time. FAC ¶ 2 n.1. Second, plaintiff alleges that “it was

1 widely discussed throughout California, after the issuance of Dynamex and California
 2 Labor Code § 2775 that gig economy companies such as Uber were violating the law by 3 continuing to classify their drivers as independent contracts.” Id. ¶ 48. To support that 4 allegation, plaintiff cites the transcript of a hearing before Judge Chhabria in a separate 5 action against defendant, Rogers v. Lyft, Inc., et. al., 20-cv-1938-VC, as well as two new 6 articles. Id.

7 The court concludes that plaintiff fails to state a § 17200 claim premised on 8 violation of Labor Code § 226.8. First, the California Supreme Court has recognized that 9 a litigant may not recover Labor Code penalties as restitution under California’s Unfair
 10 Competition Law. Pineda v. Bank of Am., N.A., 50 Cal. 4th 1389, 1401-02 (2010). In its 11 opening brief, defendant asserts that Labor Code § 226.8 authorizes the recovery of only 12 civil penalties as relief. Dkt. 37 at 24. Plaintiff fails to proffer any response to this 13 assertion in his opposition. In any event, based on a review of Labor Code § 226.8, the 14 court agrees that that section limits its monetary recovery to only civil penalties. Cal. Lab.
 15 Code §§ 226.8(b), 226.8(c), 226.8(g)(3).

16 Second, plaintiff’s citations to the transcript in Rogers and two news articles still 17 fail to show that defendant acted willfully when classifying him as an independent
 18 contractor. Under the Labor Code, an employer’s “willful misclassification” means 19 “avoiding employee status for an individual by voluntarily and knowingly misclassifying 20 that individual as an independent contractor.” Cal. Lab. Code § 226.8(i)(4). Critically, 21 plaintiff’s added allegation—i.e., that “it was widely discussed” that defendant was 22 violating California law through its employment classification practices, FAC ¶ 48—says
 23 nothing about defendant’s mental state. Again, plaintiff proffers that allegation in the 24 passive voice. Given the above, the court dismisses the § 17200 claim to the extent 25 plaintiff premises it on a violation of Labor Code § 226.8.

26 c. Plaintiff Failed to State a § 17200 Claim Premised on a Violation
 27 of Labor Code § 246

28 Labor Code § 246 generally requires an employer to provide qualifying employees

1 with one hour of paid sick leave for every 30 hours worked. Cal. Lab. Code § 246(b)(1).
2 To qualify, an employee must work in California for the same employer for 30 or more
3 days within a year from the commencement of employment. Id. § 246(a)(1).

4 In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified three deficiencies in the § 5 17200 claim premised on a violation of Labor Code § 246. First, plaintiff failed to allege
6 that he worked 30 or more days since January 2020. Dkt. 30 at 16. Second, plaintiff
7 failed to allege that he requested to use any paid sick leave or that defendant denied
8 such request. Id. Third, plaintiff failed to allege why he lacks an adequate legal remedy
9 for the purported violation of this section. Id. The court explained that Labor Code §
10 248.5 permits plaintiff to report suspected § 246 violations to the Labor Commissioner, 11 who may then bring an action against an employer. Id.

12 In his FAC, plaintiff adds two allegations to support this claim. FAC ¶¶ 44-45.
13 First, plaintiff alleges that he performed deliveries “approximately 215 days” between 14 January 2020 and December 17, 2020. Id. ¶ 44. Plaintiff states that, during that period, 15 he worked 995.04 hours picking up and delivering food and another 103.94 hours
16 between delivery requests. Id. Based on those sums, plaintiff alleges that defendant 17 owes him 24 hours of sick leave. Id. Second, plaintiff alleges that he was sick “several 18 days in 2020.” Id. ¶ 45. Plaintiff suggests that, because he was “aware” that defendant
19 “did not provide paid sick leave,” it “would have been futile for him to request” it. Id.

20 The court concludes that plaintiff fails to state a § 17200 claim premised on 21 violation of Labor Code § 246. Critically, plaintiff fails to remedy the second and third 22 defects in this claim that the court identified in its December 7, 2020 order.

23 The court understands plaintiff’s citation to Colopy v. Uber Techs. Inc., 2020 WL
24 3544982, at *3 (N.D. Cal. June 30, 2020) and James v. Uber Techs. Inc., 2021 WL
25 254303, at *15 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2021) for the proposition that he need not allege that 26 he requested sick leave to state a violation of Labor Code § 246. Dkt. 43 at 25.

27 The court reviewed the cited portions of Colopy and James. They do not alter the 28 court’s conclusion with respect to the second defect. In those orders, Judge Chen does

1 not cite any authority (aside from his own prior order) to support the subject proposition.
 2 In any event, plaintiff fails to show that he first pursued relief with the Labor
 3 Commissioner under Labor Code § 248.5 for violation of § 246 before bringing this claim.
 4 Given the above, the court dismisses the § 17200 claim to the extent plaintiff premises it
 5 on a violation of Labor Code § 246.

6 d. Plaintiff Failed to State a Claim Premised on a Violation of Labor
 7 Code § 1197.1

8 Under certain conditions, Labor Code § 1197.1 provides that an employer who 9 fails to pay minimum wage “shall be subject to a civil penalty, restitution of wages, 10 liquidated damages payable to the employee.” Cal. Lab. Code § 1197.1(a).

11 In its opening brief, defendant asserts that plaintiff may not base his § 17200 claim
 12 on a violation of Labor Code § 1197.1 because Labor Code § 1197.1 “authorizes only a 13 civil penalty for not paying employees minimum wage” and does not provide a private 14 right of action to recover such penalties. Dkt. 37 at 27.

15 Plaintiff fails to proffer any response in his opposition. Given that, the court
 16 dismisses the § 17200 claim premised on a violation of Labor Code § 1197.1.

17 e. The Court Dismisses the § 17200 Claim with Prejudice

18 In its December 7, 2020 order, the court identified a litany of deficiencies in the § 19 17200 claim. Dkt. 30 at 12-16. As detailed above, despite the opportunity to amend his 20 pleadings, plaintiff failed to cure many of those deficiencies. Thus, the court finds that 21 further amendment of this claim would be futile. Accordingly, the court will exercise its 22 “particularly broad” discretion and dismiss the § 17200 claim with prejudice. Metzler Inv.
 23 GMBH v. Corinthian Colleges, Inc., 540 F.3d 1049, 1072 (9th Cir. 2008).

24 C. Motion to Strike Analysis

25 In its motion to dismiss the original complaint, defendant alternatively requested
 26 that the court strike plaintiff’s class allegations. Dkt. 21 at 2. In its December 7, 2020
 27 order, the court denied that request as moot. Dkt. 30 at 19. When doing so, the court
 28 indicated that it disfavors using a Rule 12 motion to assess the viability of class

1 allegations absent the opportunity for discovery. Id. at 19-20. Less than subtly, the court
2 indicated to defendant that, if it defendant renewed its motion to strike, the court would 3 “likely summarily deny such a motion.” Id. at 20.

4 In its opening brief, defendant requests that the court strike plaintiff’s class action
5 allegations “to the extent the putative class includes persons bound to arbitrate.” Dkt. 37
6 at 28. First, defendant asserts that plaintiff failed to dispute in his opposition to 7 defendant’s prior motion that “only a small number of putative class members both opted 8 out of arbitration and are not covered by prior releases compared to hundreds of 9 thousands of the putative class members who are bound to arbitrate their claims on an 10 individual basis.” Id. Second, defendant argues that “[t]he fact that most putative class 11 members are bound to arbitrate necessarily precludes commonality, defeats superiority, 12 and renders [plaintiff] atypical and an inadequate class representative because he is not 13 bound to arbitrate.” Id. Third, defendant asserts that plaintiff lacks standing to represent 14 persons who chose not to opt out of arbitration. Id. at 30.

15 The court summarily denies defendant’s motion to strike the above-referenced 16 allegations. The court finds that this action’s record is insufficiently developed to even 17 entertain the propriety of the requested relief. Defendant may seek leave to file a special,
18 limited Rule 56 motion aimed at summarily adjudicating the viability of the above-
19 referenced allegations pertaining to putative class members bound by an enforceable
20 arbitration provision. In that event, the parties should be prepared to brief that motion 21 prior to any motion for class certification.

22 CONCLUSION

23 For the above reasons, the court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART 24 defendant’s motion to dismiss and DENIES defendant’s motion to strike. To summarize, 25 the court rules on defendant’s motion to dismiss as follows:

- 26 • The motion to dismiss is DENIED to the extent it is premised on the argument that 27 Business & Professions Code § 7451 abates the authorities underlying plaintiff’s
28 employment misclassification allegation. Such denial is without prejudice.

1 Defendant may renew its abatement argument on a motion for summary judgment.

2 • The motion to dismiss the Labor Code § 1194 claims for failure to pay minimum
3 wage and overtime is DENIED. On a motion for summary judgment and following 4 the opportunity for merits-based discovery on defendant’s control-related 5 practices, defendant may renew its argument that the time spent waiting on the 6 Uber Eats App between deliveries is not legally compensable.

7 • The motion to dismiss the Labor Code § 226 claim for failure to provide accurate
8 wage statements is DENIED.

9 • The motion to dismiss the Business & Professions Code § 17200 claim is 10 GRANTED in its entirety. The court DISMISSES that claim WITH PREJUDICE.

11 Defendant does not challenge the sufficiency of the allegations underlying the 12 Labor Code § 2802 claim for failure to pay business expenses. The court finds that 13 plaintiff’s amendments to that claim cure its prior deficiencies. As a result, the following
14 four claims remain live in this action: (1) the claim for failure to pay minimum wage; (2)
15 the claim for failure to pay overtime wages; (3) the claim for failure to provide accurate 16 wage statements; and (4) the claim for failure to pay business expenses.

17 Separately, prior to any motion for class certification, defendant may seek leave to 18 file a limited Rule 56 motion aimed at summarily adjudicating any class allegation 19 attempting to include putative class members bound to enforceable arbitration provision.

20 IT IS SO ORDERED.

21 Dated: June 21, 2021

22 /s/ Phyllis J. Hamilton
23 PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON
24 United States District Judge
25
26
27
28